Course Description

Fundamentals of Emergency Medicine Education is a 2-day, 17-hour course that provides participants with the knowledge and skills to become effective educators in emergency medicine. Through a dynamic and interactive format, the course focuses on best practices, strategies, updates, and educational innovations to optimize the educational environment in your Emergency Department or other medical department. This course is designed for faculty at any career stage who work with trainees and are seeking a comprehensive foundation in medical education.

The goal of this course is to teach fundamentals of medical education to improve the teaching and learning in your department.

Key Course Features

Course participants will learn from world-renowned experts in medical education techniques and best practices. The course will be facilitated by faculty from Harvard Medical School, Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center, and other international experts.

The course will incorporate principles of adult learning theory and cover the following topics: techniques for teaching in the clinical space, curriculum development, learner assessment, delivering effective feedback, engaging your faculty, generational differences in learning, education scholarship, artificial intelligence in medical education, and more.
